Are you an immigrant woman? Do you know your rights in Finland?

Have you been assaulted or threatened in your home or elsewhere?

Are you afraid that your husband or somebody close to you might be violent towards you?

Have you been stopped from meeting your friends or relatives, or prevented from being in touch with them?

Do you have to ask permission to handle errands outside of your home, e.g. to go to the shop, to the post office, to attend a class, to visit doctor or to go elsewhere?

Do you recognise these characteristics in your life?

This is violence. Violence is a threat against your fundamental human rights and according to Finnish legislation, violence is a crime.

There are many different forms of violence against women. Physical violence is when someone throws things at you, hits you, shoves you, kicks you, strangles you, twists your arm.

Psychological violence is when someone threatens you, blames you, calls you with names, follows you, watches you, humiliates you. You are also being subjected to violence if you are prevented from sleeping, taking care of your children or from using the phone.

Economic violence is economic exploitation and control targeted at you, when you are lied to about economic matters, extortion and when you are prevented from using and handing your own money.

Sexual violence is forceful sex and intercourse, rape and when someone touches you against your will.

You have the right to a life free from violence.

You are also entitled to help.
